EVERYONE HAS Potential

Compassionate

Shanna, 26, grew up in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan where she is rooted in her Métis heritage. "Take your unique talents and contribute them to the enrichment of the world around you, that's where you'll find true fulfillment in life."

Other Inuit, First Nations and Métis youth are doing the same thing. They're making achievements in sports, in school and in their communities.

The National Aboriginal Health Organization (NAHO) is celebrating these accomplishments. NAHO is looking for Canada's top Aboriginal youth — young people, 13 to 30 years of age, who are positive role models to others.

Schools, communities and individuals can nominate their role models.

For nomination forms and more information visit our website at www.naho.ca or contact:
